Jack Hollander supports infrastructure development by examining property rights, interpreting the law, and helping clients resolve disputes.

Jack focuses his practice on litigation involving property acquisition for infrastructure projects. As part of Zausmer's eminent domain team, he researches property and easement law and develops arguments that support clients' project goals.

Jack approaches legal questions by identifying what matters to the dispute and finding the most direct way to address each issue. Understanding the other party's position helps him test arguments and identify questions that need further attention. He keeps an open mind as the research develops, considering how different interpretations of the law could affect the case.

During law school, Jack interned at the Michigan Supreme Court, where he researched issues presented for appeal and drafted memoranda assessing whether cases warranted the Court's review. He also surveyed decisions from other jurisdictions and reviewed drafts of judicial opinions. In a corporate legal internship, he analyzed state laws and regulations, researched legislative developments, and drafted agreements and demand letters.

Jack earned his Juris Doctor from The George Washington University Law School, where he served as senior articles editor of the Public Contract Law Journal, which examines government procurement and contracting. That role reinforced his belief that contributing to a team starts with understanding your role: when to lead, when to listen, and how to support the work of others. He earned his bachelor's degree in political science from the University of Michigan.

A Michigan native, Jack enjoys following Detroit sports, playing golf and basketball, hiking, and spending time with his family.
